

Digital literacy is—and should be—both a concern and a priority as the FCC moves forward with its efforts to implement the National Broadband Plan. Although I support the Digital Literacy pilot project as a way for the FCC to expand digital literacy training, I strongly support the FCC's proposal that the pilot be funded through either the USF High Cost or Lifeline programs and NOT from the already oversubscribed E-rate program. In other words, please do not overburden an already complex system with limited funds.
